Cold Call Script

Remote Roles · Real Estate Acquisitions

The Opening — first 15 seconds

“Hi, is this [First Name]?”

Wait. Let them answer.

“[First Name], my name is [Your Name]. I'm calling about your property on [Street Name].”

Pause. Give them a second to place it.

“I work with a group of buyers active in [City] right now. Have you given any thought to selling it?”

Why: Say the street, not the full address. Specific enough to be real, casual enough that you don't sound like you're reading off a database.

If they say no

“That's fine — most people say that the first time. One thing worth knowing: we close on your timeline, anywhere up to six months out. The offer sits there and you pick the date.”

“While I've got you — how many bedrooms is it?”

Why: Go straight into the questions. Don't ask whether you may. Asking permission hands them a second chance to end the call, and most people take it.

If they still say no

“Understood. Do you own anything else you'd consider selling?”

If no: "Appreciate your time. Have a good one." End the call. Log it.

If they say yes

“Good. Few quick things so I can get you a real number.”

The five questions

1. How many beds and baths?
2. One to ten, what shape is it in?
3. Is it listed with an agent right now?
4. What's got you thinking about selling?
5. If the number works, how soon would you want to close?

Why: Question four is the one that matters. The rest is data a specialist could pull. Why they're selling is the only thing that tells you whether this is a real lead or someone being polite.

The handoff

“That's everything I need. Next step is one of our Home Buying Specialists reviewing it for an as-is offer.”

“Before I let you go — what number did you have in your head for the place?”

Then say nothing. The silence does the work. Whoever speaks first loses this one.

“Got it. You'll hear from the specialist inside 24 hours. Have a good one.”

Three things that decide the call

- Your first sentence sets the tone. Flat and certain beats bright and eager — bright reads as a sales call.
- Silence is a tool, not a mistake. After a question, stop talking.
- Never ask whether you may ask. Just ask.
